If, in the course of your journey to Hungary, you were held captive against your will, forced to work, or denied the pay you were promised for your work, you may be a victim of human trafficking, and therefore entitled to special protection.

Similarly, you may be a victim of human trafficking entitled to special protection if your Hungarian employer limits your freedom of movement, or if your shelter, pay and working conditions are less favourable than previously promised by your employer and/or recruiter, or if you are denied a significant portion of your pay.
